A TALE TO TELL

When the 'modern' part of the property is from 1510, you know you'll get a whole lot of character! This unusual home has been in the same ownership for over 20 years and beautifully balances original features with a layout and finish that's perfect for today's lifestyles.

Through Centuries And Generations

The owners had just been to view a barn conversion when they first drove by what is now their home and commented on how pretty it was. They had no idea it was on the market until they were looking at houses for sale later that day and caught sight of the details – it was clearly meant to be! At the time, the house was relatively untouched, which is why the features are so well preserved, so the owners have updated and improved it without compromising on the character and charm. There's a gorgeous handmade kitchen, power shower and stylish bathroom, double fronted oak garage and cart shed, new boiler, log burner, electrics and more. They have also taken good care of the roof, rethatching some and re-riding the rest, so the roof should have many healthy years of life ahead of it. One of the things the owners love is the sense that they are custodians of the property, and they like to think of the many families who have lived here over the centuries, and the ones who will live here in the years to come.

KEY FEATURES

Characterful and Cosy

The property is of clay lump construction and the brickweave extension was built to store meat and dairy and still has the original shutters to keep out the light. They make the room, now a snug, feel lovely and cosy on a cold night, while in summer, the triple aspect room is a delight. The Aga kitchen has a log burner so that too is wonderfully toasty when it's cold outside, while the thick walls of the property keep it cool in summer. There are two formal receptions, either side of the entrance hall, which means you can have a formal dining room and sitting room as well as the snug. All three receptions are heavily timbered and packed with character and the two older rooms have gorgeous brick fireplaces. There's a little study nook too – the perfect place to tuck yourself away. Upstairs, there are four bedrooms, one currently a dressing room, a bathroom with roll-top bath and a shower room too. Overall, the house is much lighter than you might expect from the mullioned windows and thatched exterior.

Accessible Countryside

The third of an acre walled garden is lovely and secluded. The owners find the courtyard comes into its own from spring, while in the summer, the garden bursts into life. There's abundant birdlife in the garden and plenty of wildlife in the pasture over the road, with hares chasing one another and deer passing by in the mornings. The owners have rented land to the riding school down the road and like having horses grazing within view, but you could use the land as a smallholding or simply as a place to relax and unwind in peace and quiet by the river. There are more horses going along the road than cars here so it's very peaceful. The Tas Valley Way provides numerous footpaths near the house. When you do need to go out and about, you'll find the house is well positioned, around 20 minutes from Norwich, Wymondham and Diss. The owner used to commute to London daily and loved being able to leave the hustle and bustle of the city behind, returning to this tranquil setting. The Suffolk coast is less than an hour away, with Southwold a favourite of the owners, while the village of Long Stratton is a short drive from the front door and has everything from a library and doctor's surgery to takeaways, vets and 'Goodies' fabulous farm shop.
