Location Carnforth is a small market town situated on the edge of the Lake District National Park.

Carnforth is perhaps best known for its railway heritage, particularly as the location where several scenes from the classic 1945 film "Brief Encounter" were filmed. The town's railway station, which opened in 1846, is still in operation today and is a popular destination for railway enthusiasts.

Aside from its railway heritage, Carnforth is also home to several notable landmarks and attractions. These include the Leighton Hall, a historic country house dating back to the 13th century; the Carnforth Bookshop, which claims to be the largest secondhand bookshop in the north of England; and the Warton Crag Nature Reserve, which offers scenic walks and stunning views over Morecambe Bay.

The town is also within easy reach of several popular destinations in the surrounding area, such as Lancaster, Morecambe, and the Lake District National Park, which offers some of the most beautiful and dramatic scenery in England.
