Chawleigh, Chulmleigh

- Historic village pub

- Private and pub gardens
- 2 flats above

Set within the heart of the picturesque village of Chawleigh, this freehold public house enjoys a wonderfully traditional Devon setting, surrounded by rolling countryside yet within easy reach of the nearby market town of Chulmleigh. The village itself is well regarded for its strong sense of community, attractive rural walks and convenient access to local amenities, schooling and transport links, making it a popular place to live and visit.

The Royal Oak Inn is believed to have traded as a public house since the 1700s, a history that stretches well beyond living memory for many local residents. After a short period of closure, the pub was reopened in 2014 and has since continued its long-standing role as a focal point of village life, offering character, warmth and a genuine sense of tradition.

Internally, the pub is arranged around two distinct bar areas, each full of atmosphere and charm, and both centred around open fires and woodburners that create inviting spaces throughout the year.

While there is currently no commercial kitchen, having been converted to a cellar by the current owners, the layout offers flexibility for a future operator to adapt the space to suit their own vision, subject to any necessary consents.

Above the pub are two self-contained flats, providing generous owner and family accommodation. These spaces continue the character of the building and offer flexible living arrangements, ideal for owner occupiers or extended family use.

Outside, the property benefits from both private and pub gardens, thoughtfully divided to provide areas for customers as well as more secluded outdoor space for the owners. There is off-road parking for approximately six vehicles, with additional on-street parking available within the village, a valuable asset for a property of this type.

Offered as a freehold opportunity, the Royal Oak Inn represents a rare chance to acquire a historic village pub with substantial accommodation, outdoor space and parking, all set within a thriving rural community and offering further potential for the next custodian to build upon its long and well-established history.
