Norfolk Street can only be described as a hidden gem amongst the hustle of a vibrant city centre. It is properties like No. 2, built c. 1825, that make Brighton & Hove the eclectic and historic city that it is today. It is thought that this spacious home was a Captains Cottage and much of the character inside, lends credence to this fact.

The property sits within Regency Square Conservation Area, so its rich history and character remain intact, and it exudes charm from the moment you enter.

As you enter the property, you have the option of going through to the lower ground floor, where you'll find a very versatile studio room, with its own outside space, en-suite shower room and large bedroom area. On the ground floor you have the main living space with its original floorboards and an opening to the kitchen with enough space for a large table. Leading on to the top 2 floor floors, there is a good-sized bedroom on the first floor and a family bathroom/WC. On the 2nd floor there are a two further bedrooms.

Undoubtedly, you'll be drawn to the first floor roof terrace, which is easily large enough for a large party, with space for BBQ, table and chairs plus a sun lounger or two.
